

Thorns

Only because you told me that you would come,
I cut a graceful rose from my garden,
Put it in the long-necked vase,
And gently placed it on the small round table.

But, you have not come.
It was the last rose before winter.

Why not pluck all the petals and leaves
And send you justly the thorny stem?